Command changes Thursday

by Roy K. Heitman
ESC Public Affairs

Command of Electronic Systems Center will change Thursday at 10:30 a.m. when Maj. Gen. Leslie F. Kenne replaces Lt. Gen. Ronald T. Kadish as the senior military officer here in a ceremony at the Flight Training Center.

Kadish is becoming director of the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization in Washington.

Rehearsals for the ceremony will begin Tuesday at 3:30 p.m. with a dry run for identified key people in the event. Wednesday at 10:30 a full rehearsal of all participants is scheduled. Units from ESC, 66th Air Base Wing, a civilian flight, the Air Force Band of Liberty and Geographically Separated Units will make up the formations.

Everyone is invited to the formal change of command ceremony and to attend a welcome reception at the Officers' Club.

Parking near the ceremony and in the Officers' and Enlisted clubs' parking lots will be reserved for distinguished visitors, so Hanscom people attending the event are urged to walk to the site. Limited parking will be available in the BX and Commissary parking lots.

After the ceremony, buses will shuttle people to and from the Officers' Club for the reception until 1:30 p.m.

Earlier Thursday, Kenne will be promoted to lieutenant general in a ceremony at ESC headquarters with Gen. George T. Babbitt, commander of Air Force Materiel Command, officiating.

Kenne is director of the Joint Strike Fighter Program that will develop the next-generation strike warfare weapon systems for the Air Force, Navy and Marines.

She entered the Air Force in 1971 as a distinguished graduate of Auburn (Ala.) University's AFROTC program. Her first assignment was as a space systems analyst at the Foreign Technology Division, Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio.

Following an aircraft maintenance officer course, she became a flight line maintenance officer at Mountain Home AFB, Idaho, before moving to Takhli RTAFB, Thailand, as maintenance supervisor.

Returning to the United States, Kenne became a student in the flight test-engineering course at the Air Force Test Pilot School, Edwards AFB, Calif. She next became project manager for air combat measuring instrumentation, and later, deputy test director of range measurement system joint testing at Nellis AFB, Nev.

Kenne moved to Kirtland AFB, N.M., as program manager in the Office of the Secretary of Defense-directed joint tests. Her next assignment was at Eglin AFB, Fla., as chief of the Airborne Systems Test Branch, and later, chief of Electronic Systems Test Division.

By then a lieutenant colonel, Kenne came to Hanscom in June 1986 as director of operations and support in the Airborne Warning and Control Systems Program Office. She later became program manager in the Joint Tactical Information Distribution System Class II Terminal office here.

Her first assignment in Washington was as chief of the Special Project Division in the Directorate of Special Programs, Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Acquisition. She moved back to Wright-Patterson as director of the LANTIRN Systems Program Office and again back to Washington as deputy director for fighters and command and control weapons programs.

Back at Wright-Patterson, Kenne was first director of the F-16 System Program Office and then vice commander of Aeronautical Systems Center. She next became vice commander of the Sacramento Air Logistics Center at McClellan AFB, Calif., before moving to Arlington, Va., as first deputy director and then director of the Joint Strike Fighter Program.

Joint STARS trains all-seeing eyes on battlefield

by Staff Sgt. Michael Dorsey
Air Force Print News

WASHINGTON — Like a hawk with eyes darting about in all directions at once, the Joint Surveillance Target Attack Radar System flies constant vigil above Yugoslavia.

NATO depends on these aircraft, supported in the air and on the ground by a mix of 200 airmen and soldiers working together to update the big picture of the battlefield. On this small contingent rides the success of Operation Allied Force.

"They know they are making a difference in the operation," said Joint STARS Commander Col. Joseph Stein during a press conference at the Pentagon. "Mr. Milosevic cannot move with impunity at any time."

Joint STARS is being developed and acquired at Electronic Systems Center by the Joint STARS Joint Program Office, directed by Col. Gary S. Connor.

The system centers around converted Boeing 707 aircraft which locate, classify and track ground targets from the air all day, regardless of weather, and common ground stations mounted on HUMMVEEs. Information gathered by the aircraft is available in real time to Army commanders in the common ground stations.

There are four Joint STARS aircraft in the Air Force inventory; two at Robins Air Force Base, Ga., and two in theater for Allied Force. The Air Force plans to have a total of 14 by 2005. The first aircraft, valued at $225 million, was delivered to the Air Force in 1996.

In addition, ESC maintains a test version of the E-8C that would be deployed if needed.

Eubanks team arrives Sunday

The members of the 1999 Maj. Gen. Eugene L. Eubank Services Award Evaluation Team will arrive here Sunday.

Headed by team chief Lt. Col. Melissa Kallet, Chief Air Force Fitness and Sports Branch at Headquarters, Air Force Services Agency, Kelly AFB, Texas, the members of the team will conduct an extensive evaluation of the 66th Services squadron over three days beginning on Monday.

This is the fifth straight year the squadron is representing Hanscom and Air Force Materiel Command in this competition to find the "best of the best" in Services organizations.

Accompanying Kallet are Capt. Mike Lamb from Randolph AFB, Texas, Master Sgt. James Ford out of Lackland AFB, Texas and William Wilson from the agency.

Side by side with the team as an observer is James Rogner, a Defense Leadership and Management Program participant.

The Eubank Award is an Air Force level award that recognizes excellence in programming and service provided by Air Force Services organizations.

Dim your lights

Q I've been a military spouse for many years, and we've been to quite a few bases. Hanscom is the first base I've seen that does not have signs outside the gates asking drivers to dim their lights. It seems to me that people leaving their headlights on would be very annoying to the gate guards.

A It can be very irritating for the gate guards. Fortunately, most folks already know to turn their lights off as they approach the gates. We discussed the matter with Security Forces and the Civil Engineer Squadron, and decided to put up the signs for visitors and as a reminder for those of us who sometimes forget. There are now signs outside every gate that say "Please dim lights."

Reform week schedule announced

Group wins Air Force Outstanding Unit Award

by Celeste Brooks

66th Air Base Wing

The organizations that make up the 66th Support Group earned the 1998 Air Force Outstanding Unit Award.

The award was presented by Brig. Gen. Ted McFarland, Electronic Systems Center vice commander at the 66th Air Base Wing Commander's Call at the Theater May 18.

"This is something that doesn't happen very often," McFarland said. "It's not often a unit wins the Air Force Outstanding Unit Award...particularly in back-to-back years. The group is part of the 66th Air Base Wing, which won the award last year."

McFarland thanked the members "for making Hanscom a wonderful place to live and work. It's amazing what you've done for the community, not only for those here at the base, but for all 125,000 customers you serve."

The award was established in 1954, and is awarded to units not larger than wing level for meritorious service of great significance in accomplishing the mission.

The Group supports 125,000 active duty members, dependents, and retirees spanning eight states; 1,500 structures, including 850 housing units; 32,000 identification cards, 45,000 Family Support Center visits, 4,300 vehicle registrations, and more than 240 Honor Guard ceremonies.

"The men and women of the 66th Support Group are absolutely tops," said Col. Peggy Shaw, 66th Support Group commander. "It is so wonderful to see the Air Force recognize all their great accomplishments in 1998. This accomplishment clearly communicates just how spectacular our team is but the real winners are the men and women we support with excellence across Electronic Systems Center."

One of the group's major accomplishments as a team was the success of Boston Air Show '98, which brought over 800,000 visitors to Hanscom. It was one of the five largest shows in America, bringing in over 100 aircraft, and the concessions netted $300,000 for quality of life funds.

During 1998, each of the group's organizations reached for a new level:

❑ Selected as Air Force Materiel Command's best small mission support squadron for 1998, the 66th Mission Support Squadron graduated the largest Community College of the Air Force class in Hanscom history and the third largest class in the Air Force. The education fair drew nearly 50 percent more colleges and the job fair brought in 25 percent more people than 1997.

❑ The 66th Communications and Information Division, winner of the Lt. Gen. Grant Communication Professionalism Award, successfully migrated 7,000 Hanscom customers and 47 organizations from Banyan VINES and Beyond Mail to Windows software NT and Exchange network computing environment in just six months.

❑ The 66th Security Forces Squadron kept the crime rate down to 2.15 per thousand. They partnered with the Secret Service to provide security for President Clinton's visit, and again provided top-notch security when King Hussein of Jordan flew into Hanscom. They were again selected as the command's best small security forces squadron.

❑ As the command's best small civil engineer squadron in 1998, the 66th Civil Engineer Squadron established a new Facility Utilization Board, ensuring limited resources are applied to the most critical needs first. They also performed in-house work on eight major projects, saving more than $600,000 while continuing pole-away, which places utilities underground.

❑ The Civilian Personnel Flight's employee and manager outreach programs ensured zero performance rating grievances for the first time ever. By implementing a state-of-the-art imaging system, they reduced administrative processing time by 50 percent. In fact, Headquarters, Air Force Personnel Center is looking at incorporating this plan throughout the Air Force.

❑ Winning their fifth straight command Quality of Life award, the 66th Services Squadron renovated the Enlisted Club Dining Room and made it the first room in the Air Force to be dedicated to the enlisted members of the Tuskegee Airmen. They also installed glow-in-the-dark bowling at the bowling alley and a Colorado Timing System at the base pool.

"This is a major accomplishment for the 66th Support Group," said Lt. Col. David Thompson, the group's deputy commander. "The selection criteria is extremely demanding, and it is very rare to receive the award 'back to back.' The support group continues to put world-class programs in place, all because of vibrant, innovative professionals at every level of the organization. These superstars understand their critical role in supporting the ESC mission, and they are experts in reaching out to their customers and incorporating continuous process improvement."

Chapter hosts signing for Tuskegee Airman

by Capt. Ronald E. Cleaves

Tuskegee Airman Incorporated

Dr. Charlene E. McGee Smith, author of "Tuskegee Airman: The Biography of Charles E. McGee - Air Force Fighter Combat Record Holder," and the daughter of McGee, held a book signing Friday which was sponsored by Hanscom's Col. Charles E. McGee chapter of Tuskegee Airmen Inc.

The book addresses the deeds of this unheralded group of men who, with the aid of their support crews, flew over 1,578 missions and 15,553 combat sorties in WWII without losing a single bomber to enemy fighters — an unequalled aviation record for bomber escort duties that still stands to this day.

The exploits of the Tuskegee Airmen are many, yet are seldom heard. In tribute to the many unheralded fathers, husbands, sons and brothers leading exemplary lives, Col. Charles E. McGee's inspiring story is now being told.

McGee fought in WWII, Korea and Vietnam. He holds the record for the highest three-war total of fighter combat missions of any pilot in U.S. Air Force history.

His military service began as one of the Tuskegee Airmen in the 332nd Fighter Group flying the P40, P39, P47 and long range missions in the P51 Mustang.

After retiring from the Air Force, McGee devoted himself to many good causes, particularly those encouraging young people to achieve.

In August 1998, he was chosen to lead Tuskegee Airmen, Inc., into the 21st Century, serving a second time as president of the international association. In fact, the Hanscom chapter of the organization is named after McGee.

Dr. Charlene E. McGee Smith, daughter of retired Tuskegee Airman Col. Charles E. McGee and author of "Tuskegee Airman: The Biography of Charles E. McGee - Air Force Fighter Combat Record Holder," signs a copy of the book for 2nd Lt. Erika Farmer-Hill.

Smith now lives in Athens, Ohio, with her husband and the youngest of their four children. She is the Associate Dean of the Ohio University College of Osteopathic Medicine and also Associate Professor of Social Medicine in the College's Department of Social Medicine.

American Society of Military Comptrollers hold brunch

by Theresa Fike

ESC Public Affairs

The American Society of Military Comptrollers, Yankee Chapter, held a brunch May 28 to discuss and review disbursing procedures and regulations of accounting and finance at Hanscom and upcoming events involving the chapter.

The guest speaker was Col. Martha Beatty, the director of Air Force Accounting and Finance Office, a new office juxtaposed with the Defense Finance and Accounting Service in Denver, Colo.

The office works through the major commands to monitor finance offices, ensure efficient operations and internal controls, and develop procedural guidance.

One of the new advances is the Leave and Earnings Statement which would become available to military and civilian personnel's e-mail accounts, said Beatty. With this program, changes concerning pay, such as allotments, can be made directly on the computer. This could alleviate some of the finance offices' tasks.

Beatty also stressed the importance of preventing fraud by controlling paper flow.

The brunch concluded with a raffle and an open forum.

Reflections of life

The 1998 Air Force Photography Contest was recently held at Lackland AFB. Among the top winners at Air Force level was John Abisamra from Melrose, Mass., who is a GS-12 Contract Specialist currently working at ESC-GA. Abisamra won “First Place” in Group I, Category B - People, with his entry entitled “Reflections Of Life.” Abisamra will receive a certificate and $150.

SC to undergo conversion

The 66th ABW Vice Commander, Col. James Jackson, announced Wednesday a Direct Conversion to Contract decision for the SC Communications function.

The comparison of current in-house cost and contract performance determined contract performance to be a more efficient and cost effective method of operation. This Direct Conversion impacted 78 Air Force people (10 officers, 68 enlisted and no civilians).

The Direct Conversion was conducted in compliance with the Air Force policies in AFP 26-12, Commercial Activities Program, that implements the office of management and Budget Circular A-76, Performance of Commercial Activities. This circular reaffirms the government’s policy to rely on the private sector for products and services.

When in-house performance of commercial activities is not required for national defense reasons and contracting is more cost effective, conversion to contract performance is in the best interest of the American taxpayer.

Each E-8C can look more than 150 miles behind enemy lines to forewarn field commanders through two mediums — a moving target indicator and synthetic aperture radar.

Both produce photograph-like images of targets that include airports, bridges and vehicles. The combined air operations center in theater receives data from the aircraft’s radar system and passes information in real time to NATO forces so they can prepare, react and respond accordingly.

Airmen and soldiers supporting Joint STARS are responsible for this intelligence mission in the air and on the ground.

Stein, whose 93rd Airlift Control Wing is located at Robins, just returned from the Balkans. While there, he received a first-hand progress report on the performance of his people and their equipment. On average, they fly 125 hours per month. In Allied Force it is 165 hours, largely because of their 16-hour missions.

Stein said that although the pace is fast, morale is high.

“I couldn’t be more proud of our men and women today,” the commander said. “The reliability rates are higher than expected. The crews, the maintainers, the support personnel — they are doing everything they have to do to keep (the aircraft) flying for the theater commander.”

The colonel said that as the pace quickens, the unit’s 96-percent mission effectiveness rate may decline. But for now, there is no sign of fatigue. This is especially significant considering that air traffic is more congested because of the influx of aircraft in the region.

“The bottom line,” Stein said, “is that Joint STARS is on-station and engaged in Kosovo. It is making a big difference.”

In a base-wide effort to improve the appearance and quality of life on Hanscom, over 200 volunteers, both military and civilian, took part in 'I Love Hanscom Day' May 28.

Volunteers performed low cost projects at Hanscom's parks, playgrounds, surrounding dormitory areas, facilities, buildings and memorials.

The work consisted of landscaping the outside areas, repairing and painting equipment and buildings, and picking up litter.

Volunteers did not have to take leave for this event, and military participants were allowed to wear civilian clothes during the day. Those who could not take part in the activities were asked to clean up their work areas.

After the work was finished, a "Burger Burn" was held behind the clinic.
